Title: Alternate to surgery as mainstay of therapy for advanced squamous cell carcinoma of head neck (SCCHN)

Abstract (max 500 words)

Management of Squamous Cell Carcinoma of Head Neck region (SCCHN) is undergoing dynamic changes due to several factors. On the one hand, for patients with advanced disease, 50%–60% develop local recurrence in 2 years and 20%–30% develop distant metastatic disease. Also with increasing longevity, patients are likely to have significant co-morbidities that would affect the ability to tolerate therapy. Finally there is increasing interest in the organ / function preservation strategy. As a result cancer directed systemic therapy is gaining importance. Induction CT followed by combined modality approach has been shown to improve overall survival as well as quality of life. The VA Larynx Trial clearly showed that induction chemotherapy resulted in 64 % larynx preservation when followed with CT plus RT. The MACH-NC Meta-analysis and its update teased out the finer points of differences between induction chemotherapy and concomitant chemo-radiotherapy. This was also seen in RTOG 91-11 study and then the GORTEC 2000-01 study showed that response rates and laryngeal preservation were better with the three drug combination. The TAX 324 Phase III showed how 3 drug combination chemo actually improves survival and I will discuss how our data shows that it also improves resectability in SCCHN. The MACH NC 2009 update confirmed and quantified the value of induction chemotherapy. In fact, 70% of the patients of laryngeal cancer who achieved pathological CR have the potential to never require any further treatment. Thus there is significant evidence to demonstrate the value of non-surgical therapy for SCCHN with curative intent. The current focus on personalized medicine and use of targeted molecules adds additional data which will also be discussed.
